North Alberta is putting a new export on the market. At Leduc and Millet stations are great piles of gray willow pickets awaiting transportation to Hugh River and other points in the range country where they will be used as posts for wire fences. Leduc has already shipped ten cars and has about fifteen cars more ready to ship. The wood of the gray willow resembles cedar and is almost as indestructible by rot. Hitherto it has been considered a drawback to the country, but now that it has become an article of valuable export that view must change.

PRESIDENT HILL'S OPINION.

President Hill, of the Great Northern railway, has been airing his views on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway project in the Toronto World. It is unusual for the great railway magnate of the United States to talk on Canadian subjects. Like a good many other Canadians in the United States he generally affects an ignorance of matters Canadian. So that when he talks and talks at length on such matters it may be taken that he has an interest in talking. That he wants to be heard. The fact that the talking was done in St. Paul to a Toronto reporter who went there to give Mr. Hill an opportunity of talking to the Canadian public through the columns of the World, makes no difference, except to emphasize the probability that the reporter was there by request. Of course Mr. Hill did not make his money by telling people everything he knew, or in fact everything he thought. (The probability is that he is not doing it yet. When he talks for publication we know what he wants other people to think, but only by reading between the lines, or by the aid of vivid fancy, can we guess what he thinks. The thing of which we are sure is that he talked for publication. This proves a desire to influence the public mind of Canada, and proves conclusively that Mr. Hill has or expects to have an interest in the results of that influence.

The tempo of his talk was against the Grand Trunk Pacific railway scheme. He was against the scheme itself as not required and he was against public aid to the scheme as either unnecessary or wasteful. His idea that the scheme was uncalculated for was based on the alleged fact that all requirements were already met by the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern. As Mr. Hill has not now, so he says, any interest in the Canadian Pacific, he must have been talking for the Canadian Northern, indicating an alliance between the Great Northern of the United States and the Canadian Northern. This is as most people in the West wish, provided the Grand Trunk Pacific goes on.

We want the Grand Trunk Pacific as an all-Canadian enterprise, large enough and strong enough to ensure its separate existence from the Canadian Pacific, or any other company. But if besides the Canadian Pacific system, and the Grand Trunk Pacific system we can also through the Canadian Northern get the competition of a third and still greater system it will be all the better.

"FLAT BOAT" MacLANE

The Portage Luberal is authority for the statement that Mary MacLane, the young authoress of Montana residence whose book "The Story of Mary MacLane" was the literary sensation of the United States a year ago, is a daughter of one of the foundation builders of the Canadian West, J. W. MacLane, very much better known while he was alive as "Flat Boat" MacLane. Mr. MacLane was one of the most prominent of the pioneers of present conditions in Manitoba. He acquired his nick name from his prominence in the days before the railway in the business of bringing supplies down the Red River to Winnipeg from the Northern Pacific railway at Moorhead. He was a man of the greatest energy and enterprise. From "Flat Boat" he went into steam boating on the Red River. Afterwards when the arrival of the railway at St. Boniface put flat boats and steamboats out of business he owned and operated a steam ferry across the Red River between Winnipeg and St. Boniface. He built the fine flour mill at Winnipeg, which became the Hudson's Bay Company's mill. He was contractor for the mail service between Winnipeg and Edmonton—according to the first contractor J. Mac McKay—until the railway was completed to Calgary. Of the kind of persons who were located in Winnipeg in the early 70's J. W. MacLane was probably the best and closest favorably known, and the most successful, but not the most successful.

It is not generally known that Mr. MacLane served an apprenticeship at Edmonton in still earlier days, having come here as a miner from that undefined misty known as "Across the Mountains." Many stories of his adventures and enterprises here linger even yet among the very old timers. He was one of a partnership who were the first to break ground for farming purposes in rear of the river settlements of this district. His breaking could be distinguished for many years on the prairie alongside the Fort Saskatchewan trail on or about J. Coleman's farm.

Mr. MacLane was originally from the neighborhood of Whitby or Port Hope, Ontario, and went from there to the mines of the Pacific slope. He drifted back east across the mountains by way of Edmonton until, attracted by the new development and evident possibilities of the Red River Valley, he made Winnipeg the centre of his operations as well as aspirations, until the comparatively early close of a most active life.

For Canada's sake it is to be hoped that the young authoress does her father credit; but from criticism of her book which have appeared it is a question if the prominence which she has achieved is creditable to her heart; whatever it may be to her heart.

To a man of the restless energy the unbounded ambition and the substantial achievements of J. W. MacLane, living during the history making period in which he did it would seem strange that so soon he should only be known, in the very country which he helped so largely to build, as the father of an authoress of books of at least questionable desirability. Such is fame. It brings out with startling prominence Bill Nye's celebrated motto: "Live while you live; for you'll be a long time dead."

INTERESTED IN THE WEST

F. Fry, who recently returned from a trip to Toronto and other eastern points, states that he was besieged with questions relating to the west, Edmonton particularly. The following is from the Mail and Empire of an early January number:

Mr. F. Fry, a member of the firm of Dobson, Jackson and Fry, of Edmonton, Alberta, arrived in the city last evening, and is stopping at the Walker. Mr. Fry is a Torontonian, and has been out in the western region for the last ten years. Speaking of "The Man on the Street," Mr. Fry said that with the exception of Winnipeg, Edmonton is the best town in the Northwest. The town has now a population of about 4,000, and a large number of Americans are coming in daily, many of whom originally came from Ontario. During last year over three hundred houses were built in the town, including a large hotel, which was erected at a cost of about $50,000. Mr. Fry's firm has the contract for the construction of a waterworks and sewerage system. Mr. Willis Chapman, of Toronto, is chief engineer of the works. About 45 per cent. of the contracts have already been completed, and the water will be turned on about March the first. The Canadian Northern railway engineers, Mr. McLeod, chief and Mr. Armstrong, are at present in Edmonton surveying for the station and round-house, and also making other arrangements for immediate improvements. Mr. Jones, superintendent of the C.P.R., is also in town with a staff of assistants, surveying for their company, which will shortly extend its lines into the town.
